There was no evidence in the case that on the night in question he committed any crime other than entering the warehouse, but the petition of his father, who is a respected citizen of Holland and who has lived there for fifty-one years, states that he was never arrested for any crime, but was once arrested for being intoxicated in company with others. I think the sentence was excessive and in view of the petition before referred to, signed by one hundred citizens of Holland and in view of the fact that the prisoner has served about one year in the State prison and has sufficiently atoned for his failing, I believe a pardon...
