Not illustrated. 1877 Excerpt: . . . not been bought for nothing, and could be retained only so long as we were willing to pay the price. A full and clear expression of this sentiment was evoked from him by the tidings of the great battle that tried, more severely than it had been tried since Albuera, that British courage, which, to use his own words, is never so sedate and stubborn as towards the close of a doubtful and murderous day. These were the terms, in which he wrote, with the gazette containing the account of Inkerman on the table before him: The interest excited by the war is as great as that which in my boyish days used to be excited by the Duke of Wellingtons operations. I am well pleased on the whole. It is impossible not to regret so many brave men, and to feel for the distress of so many families. But it is a great thing that, after the longest peace ever known, our army should be in a higher state of efficiency than at the end of the last war. The spirit of the soldiers, and of the whole country, is a complete guarantee against those dangers with which we were threatened two or three years ago. Nobody will be in a hurry to invade England for a long time to come. The occasion had now arrived for carrying into effect that part of the India Act of 1853 which Helated to the appointment of...
