The station master did not even write a message for the telegraph clerk to send; and I look upon it as quite certain that the accident would probably have been prevented if he had done his duty. 4. The telegraph clerk was greatly to blame for the part he took in these proceedings. When the night watchman reported to him, at 6.50 a.m., what had happened to the down goods train, he should at once have gone to the station master, if he did not like to incur the responsibility of trying to telegraph to Bainham without orders, and not have referred the night watchman to the station master. 5. The foreman of platelayers...
