Contrariwise the education and training of people to want that which is good is infinitely more worth while. Without pausing to define the good it may be suggested that men would gain greatly by preservation and restoration of the essentials of a simple environment - pure air, open spaces, opportunity for physical activity, less of commercialized recreation and more of simple social life corrected by artistic and educational criteria. Modern man has builded great cities, he has erected economic standards of success, he has transformed the world industrially and has forced himself into a life of sedentary toil. When he looks at the result of his work he finds it is not good and then foolishly sets about devising special exercises to be practiced daily with phonograph accompaniment, or doing breathing exercises for health s sake, or eating yeast rather than wholesome foods because his factory organizations have made wholesome foods nearly impossible. In combating the handicaps and hazards of modern life, it has not always been clear that the way lay in a restoration of the desirable elements in nature. Physical education will make its contribution in modern times, not by proposing artificialities, such as aesthetic dancing and Swedish gymnastics, but rather by emphasizing the essential needs of man and by offering natural forms that represent the best motor expressions of the human race. It is a pleasure to note the philosophic significance of the work that Miss Colby is doing in her classes and in this..
